SINGLE PROCESS INITIATIVES (SPI)

BENEFITS

The contractor eliminates non-value and potentially disruptive requirements. In addition once the SPI has been approved it will continue through future contracts, so the contractor has eliminated some of the uncertainty associated with the bid process.

The government obtains lower prices and lower administrative costs by eliminating unnecessary requirements. As above, these savings are compounded through future contracts.

BACKGROUND

Department of Defense program which focuses on contractors who are working on a number of government contracts. Different contracts may contain inconsistent or conflicting requirements in areas such as quality assurance.

Contractors are encouraged to identify these conflicts and propose alternatives. The alternative is usually a single process to be used on all contracts. The Defense Contract Management Command (DCMC) Office servicing the contractor will receive the proposal and assure that all buying agencies provide review and concurrence. DCMC and the buying agencies also review and concur in proposed government savings associated with SPI proposals.
